Millions Are About to Have a Bad Valentine's Day... If They Don't Play this Hot and Sexy Dating Card Game

ATLANTA – February 4, 2008 – Millions of adults, single, divorced, male and female, are about to have a bad Valentine's Day says Amanda Brown, CEO of Playing the Card Game, because they don't know how to find that "special someone" with which to share Valentine's Day.

How many times do you have to date a loser to loose faith? The jerks are plentiful and the good guys are one out of ten, but how do you find them? Ms. Brown, says that the biggest problem is singles don't know how to communicate on the first date to find someone that is compatible and has the same values, belief and dreams. That is why she invented the dating solution called "Playing the Field" Card Game.

Playing the Field Card Game is a delightfully poignant idea that was developed and produced by the creative genius extraordinaire, Amanda Brown, a Relationship Expert & Dating Designer, after she discovered the secret to dating. Do guys really listen? "When you ask the right questions they do," says Amanda. So she developed a fun and unique card game that allow you to explore your potential partner in a safe and fun environment.

No more nerve wrecking, tough or awkward moments, now it is easier with her new game, Playing the Field. It's a game that sparks conversation between a couple, whether in the "first stages of dating," or in a "more established yet needs spark to get it going again" period.

Since so many of us need help getting the conversation started Amanda gives us the tool to get things rolling with Playing the Field. By asking the questions for you in a game format, she makes it easy to ask the right questions without making it uncomfortable for you or your prospective mate.

- "Describe the perfect kiss. Feel free to try it out on me." (Come on ladies...that kiss tells a lot!)
- "Are you an animal lover?" (Be honest, you're not going to part with Sparky...EVER!)
- "What is your idea of the perfect date?" (It may not be the same...a good thing to know up front!)
- "You receive a large bonus, what do you do with the money" (Is he greedy?)

These are questions you want, and need to know, yet feel awkward asking. Some of the questions are more probing, others just help spark conversation -- either way you are going to have sweet conversations with the help of Amanda Brown and Playing the Field Card Game.

Save your sweet tooth! Have a sweet conversation instead!
